

What sets Vanguard apart

When it comes to investing, ask yourself:

Why let anything stand in the way of your goals?

Whether you invest on your own, through your employer, for an institution, or as a financial advisor, you want an investment company that focuses on one thing—doing what’s best for its clients. At Vanguard, we’re built to do just that.

That’s because Vanguard is the only company owned by its clients.

We don’t have outside owners to pay, so we have no conflicting loyalties. And we don’t charge high fees or costly commissions that can diminish investors’ returns.

Because we’re built differently from other investment companies, Vanguard funds can keep lowering costs to help investors earn more over time and reach their goals.

But doing what’s best for investors goes beyond lowering costs. It also means putting them first at all times and protecting their long-term interests.

That’s why millions of investors around the world trust the one company that’s built to look out for them:

Vanguard.
